Radio In Africa: Politics, Cultures, Communities

Posted on October 6, 2011

Radio is a major medium of communication in places like Africa that have high illiteracy rates, like Africa. This pioneering collection of essays on Radio in Africa examines the roles played by radio — in Anglophone, Lusophone, and Francophone countries — in the public sphere, its links to new media, resistance to dictatorships, and building communities.

Tweet

This entry was posted in Research Network, Research Network Relevant Publications, Bookmark the permalink.

← Balancing Acts: Youth Culture in the Global City
Last call for The Intercultural Innovation Award