

Posted 22 September 2011

Have you seen the latest Roll Back Malaria Report (RBM)?

As African leaders meet in New York with other world leaders this week, we hear there's been a 38% decline in global malaria related deaths between 2000-2010, and 38 countries are approaching the elimination stage of malaria eradication.

That sounds impressive, but what do those stats mean?

They mean that 485 children were saved from malaria deaths every single day in 2010, and whilst we haven't reached our target of zero malaria deaths yet, these figures prove that our efforts are saving lives.

Have you got involved yet? Take the first step to realizing a future free from malaria by signing our Faiths Act declaration.

<http://www.tonyblairfaithfoundation.org/malaria-declaration>

485 children's lives saved every day. That's a truly remarkable achievement - and it's thanks to an extraordinary coalition of individuals and institutions across the world.

We know the task of zero malaria deaths has not been completed; in fact, a further 3 million children's lives could be saved by 2015 through universal coverage of preventative measures.

In the words of Secretary-General Ban-Ki moon, "The achievements of the past decade and the growing momentum are cause for renewed optimism that we can achieve the goal of a world free of malaria."

We need to work together to realize this incredible vision and save more children from malaria. Sign our Faiths Act declaration today:

<http://www.tonyblairfaithfoundation.org/malaria-declaration>

We really are rolling back malaria. Thank you for playing your part!

Best wishes,

Stephanie

Tony Blair Faith Foundation

P.S. Find out more - read the RBM report here:

<http://www.tonyblairfaithfoundation.org/RBM-report>